By Heywood Broun

Henry Miller opened a new theatre last night with a new play, and at the end of the third act he said, "I'm going to do my best, because I'm not great enough to afford not to." Thus the new venture begins in the right spirit, It is an excellent thing for New York that Henry Miller should have his own theatre, for he is a good actor and a conscientious one. His theatre, the Henry Miller, is a delight, if you don't mind the curtain too much. The smoking room is certainly the finest in town. The new play, which is called "The Fountain of Youth," does not rank so high. It is a poor piece of work throughout. Louis Evan Shipman has endeavored to create an atmosphere of mellow gayety. Instead, he gains the effect of a middle-aged Methodist minister making his first address to the young men of the Boys' Club down in the church gymnasium, He attempts to slap his audience on the back, but his hand is so heavy that the only reaction is "Ouch!"

The play tells the story of a man of forty-odd who comes back from Zanzibar seeking to recover lost illusions and finds them by falling in love with a young girl. He falls in love early in the second act, but naturally he does not win her until two and a half seconds before the final curtain falls. His success came just in time. He was looked to sail back to Zanzibar at 8:30 the next morning. Undoubtedly the passage money was refunded. He was booked to sail back to Zanzibar at 8:30 the next morning. Undoubtedly the passage money was refunded. Clerks in the New York office of the steamship line which runs to Zanzibar have learned to be more than doubtful about the men who are going back there to forget. The head clerk tells me that they never sail. The heroine always appears in time. In fact, he says that the line loses passengers every month who are dragged right off the gangplank as the whistle is blowing. But then, as he explains, the line doesn't mind very much. They make almost all their money out of the freight, anylow.

But whether good or bad, he did extremely well by it, playing with a spirit, a facility, a purity alike of tone and of style not often heard in young violinists. His double stopping and declicate spiccato work were particularly admirable. As for the Scott suite, it was worth hearing if only to prove that clever youngsters in England are still imitating, and very closely and consciously, it would very closely and consciously, it would seem, the American MacDowell.

Tom Whitlock, Who Worked Three Months Last Summer Up in Madison County, Urges Schoolmates to "Go After That Country Cooking"

"Farming's the best fun on earth, and, oh, you country cooking!"

This is the credo of seventeen-year-old Tom Whitlock, of 442 East Twenty-sixth Street, Brooklyn, regarding summer farming for high school boys, and Tom speaks from experience, for he worked three months last summer for Frank A. Wagner, a farmer of Madison County, and at the end of that time was pronounced a regular farmer.

And to prove that he thinks farming is the best fun on earth, Tom is going up to the Wagner farm again this year, and after that he is planting wear.

Aided by the officials of the British and the French armies, Mr. Griffith, his camera man, his assistants, and his players, moved forward until within actual sound of the roaring of guns and the bursting of shrapnel shells. Here, with grim war as a background, Mr. Griffith began the filming of the sweetest LOVE story ever told. Here, with death on every side and destruction in the air, Mr. Griffith unfolded upon the screen the eternal and never-dying story of a great love which could not be destroyed.

Mr. Griffith, with the ingenuity and genius of the greatest master director in the world, utilized the wonderful pictorial background of the Great War as a scenic setting for his drama of LOVE. Here were real trenches, real battles; real war scenes, taken

Here were real trenches, real battles; real war scenes taken amid the fire and smoke of conflict; here were no moving picture "supers," such as one sees in a studio picture, but real, flesh and blood, soldiers of France, of England, fighting with their last drop of blood in defense of civilization; the only "supers" used were German soldiers, prisoners of war, filmed back of the firing line, tickled to death they were in such good hands with D.
